

COLLEGE REPORT

By ROBERT M. BERSI
Assistant to the President
California State College, Dominguez Hills

In this week's column, taken from the Campus Master Plan, Quincy Jones discusses the site development of the Dominguez campus. Quincy Jones is often heard to say that nothing is so extravagant as a lack of planning. To make meaningful decisions about their work on the master plan, all participants need an understanding of the principles involved. When all participants coordinate their efforts in relation to the same established guidelines or design principles, the results can be particularly productive. The nature of this master plan for Dominguez Hills requires a high level of coordination and cooperation between the Campus Master Plan, Quincy Jones discusses the site development of the Dominguez campus.

campus up to the time the college reaches an enrollment of 10,000 students will be completed by the time the enrollment reaches 5,000, except for a portion of outdoor physical education, housing increment No. 2, and certain roads. At 15,000 enrollment, part of the third increment of housing will be done. The remainder of the grading and parking when the campus reaches 20,000.

THE SITE drops a total of 140 feet from northeast to southwest, from elevations of 164 feet to 24 feet (at Avalon and 190th streets).

With the split-level scheme, the buildings are used to change grades on the campus. In other words, where the grades fall off, entry to the building is at one level, then it drops down a level to another access to the outside areas. In this manner, the building itself makes the transition from two levels on the campus.

This concept will not be evident in the initial buildings, however. The term "initial buildings" refers to the first buildings to be built on the campus. These buildings are not "temporary." At the start of the new campus, these buildings serve all the needs for instructional and non-instructional areas. Departing from the established practice of erecting "temporary" structures for initial enrollments, the Trustees approved the recommendation that the college start with buildings that continue to function as an integral part of the permanent academic core of the campus.

The initial buildings will serve the long-term goal of housing the special "Small College" which will have 500 students. This Small College becomes a vital part of the Dominguez Hills curriculum. Its experimental work may contribute considerably to development of education throughout the state sometime in the future. This Small College facility will house the Dominguez Hills students for two years. Beginning in 1970, new classroom buildings will be available.

New Post Marks Banking Career

Prior to her new post, Mrs. Kissack served in a similar capacity at the bank's Dominguez Hills branch for two years, and as assistant operations officer at the San Pedro branch for a year.

REALTORS CITED . . . Two local Realtors have received national recognition and been designated as certified property exchangers, according to officials of the Torrance-Lomita Board of Realtors. Displaying their new certificates are (from left) Alvin Grancell, associated with the Jerry Alter Realty Estate firm and Dorothy Howlett, a South Bay area realtor. Presenting the award to her is Earl Rose, regional vice president of the California Real Estate Association. The awards are made by the National Institute of Real Estate Brokers.
